epired in the House of Lords, that pore is only a question of time, and is, , indeed, almost within measurable distance. No doubt it will require a good deal of as will be seen by the correspondence published in another column, and they may be trusted not to let the subject drop. That the Admiralty, of all other departments, should oppose the project is indeed surprising. In 1878, so we are informed by Lord CARRARVON, who was in a position to know, the Russian Government had taken meassures for cutting the submarine cables in the Eastern waters and for equipping ships for that special purpose: Sseing how closely the Russian ships have been watched by Admiral Dowser during the recent crisis it seems hardly possible that any of them would have been afforded a chance of outting the cable Supposing fortune favoured them and they had the chance, they would of course cuf. the direct cable as well as the present one. The only advantage which would be gained in that respect is that perhaps a direct cable would be more difficult to find and pick up than one touching land en route. The statement shows, however, what great importance the Russians attach to telegraphic communication; and it is not difficult to imagine the immense advantage they would possess if they succeeded in cutting off communication between the British fleet and London, while their own communication between St. Peters--burg and Vladivostock remained uninter-

The real argument for a direct cable is the danger of allowing our communication to be dependent on a line which touches the To many of them, we believe if they dure territory of another power and may at any moment be destroyed by that power. In the event of an alliance between France and Russia against England, which one moment seemed not very improbable, the French Government would certainly not allow messages to pres Cape St. James for Hongkong or vice vered, while England would herself be compelled to stop the communication for the double purpose f preventing French messages passing to Sai. gon and English messages from falling into French hands. The Government lays stress on the fact of there being two alternative telegraphic routes to the Far East, but this advantage would at once disappear with an alliance against England of the two Powers -who have it in their power to stop the communication. A direct cable our own na the next French and Australian mails, val forces would be able to protect, but they cannot possibly ensure communication being kept up, by the present route. Saigon, as regards independent telegraphic communication, is in reality better creumstanced than Australia, and China. Hongkong. We have referred to Mr. Coorse as an authority simply because his book happened to be the nearest at hand; of them till a day or two ago. We are convinced but nearly all travellers in China have the same tale to tell with respect to the Roman Catholic missionaries. That these gentlemen are thoroughly earnest and conscientious in the position they take up-and disinterested except in so far as they suppose the interests of the Church to be affectedis beyond question. They cheerfully lay aside the comforts, and luxuries of civilization and retire into the interior, where they will uncomplainingly reside for many years, supporting themselves on a pittance of ten or fifteen dollars a month. But they never forget for a moment that they belong to the Church Militant, and to them the mandarins are the personification of the powers of with whom they must wage a constant war for the preponderancy of influence over he populace. Bunker for the services he has rendered to them during the past three years and to express their most earnest wishes that on the expiration of his twelve months' leave of absence he will-return fully restored to health and again work with that untiring zeal and energy which has so far distinguished him as a member of the Order: An opening address was delivered by Bro. W. Coulbourne, followed by the brothen named above representing the Lodges mentioned, setting forth Bro. Bunker's past services and expressing the feelings of the Order generally towards him. Bro. Bunker, in in reply, thanked the Chairman, representatives, and members present for the kindly sentiments of regard that had been expressed in his favour, and trusted that Providence would direct an early return to his some of labour in the Temperance cause, remarking that the encomiums uttered that evening were far in advance of what he deserved; although his heart, since his joining the Order, had always been with them, vot circumstances had often prevented him from giving the cause that attention which it so truly and justly deserved, and he felt highly gratified moned at the instance of the Surveyor General that the Order should desire to show its feelings on charges of creating buildings in a ruinous of affection in the manner that it had. At the close of the 4th and commanament of the 5th moon the weather was dry, and reports of an indefinite character resched the Memorialis from various districts. The Memorialist and his committees of administration, being resolved that his predecessor's strongous efforts-for the prohibition of the production of the drug should not be allowed to be thrown away, adhered to that both these lines passed through foreign. and issued strict injunctions and exhortations to

PARLIAMENT AND TELEGRAP ----COMMUNICATION WITH HONGKONG.

In the House of Lords, on the 14th April, th following debate took place:-Viscount Sidmonthasked whether the attention of Her Majesty's Government had been directed to the fact that the sole method of telegraphic British settlements in the East was by wirepassing through a territory in the possession of a foreign Power; and whether it was the intent tion of Her Majesty's Government to adopimmediate measures to insure the safety of intercourse by electric telegraph with those parts. The question, he said, was one of great importance, and he hoped the Government had given

The Earl of Derby said the noble viscount was probably aware that there were two alternative lines of telegraphic communication between this country and Hongkong. One of these lines past ed through Russian territory in Siberia and down the Chinese coast to Hougkong, and the other from England to Singapore, which was more generally used, passed through Saigon, the French settlement, to Hongkong. It was true territory, but they did not both mass through territory belonging to the same Power; and if by any unfortunate event communication by one line was out off there would still remain the other. He did not denv that there were alvandifference when we were not dependent on one line, but had the choice of two alternative routes was at the present time utider the consideration of the anthorities a proposal to make a line direct from Singapore to Hongkong. That proposal was being considered by the various departments concerned, but he was authorized. by his noble friend the First Lord of the Admiralty to say that the Naval authorities. while not denying that queh a line would be useful did not regard it as of primartura which would be involved might be more usefully employed elsewhere. At the same time that was the opinion of only one of the donnet consideration of the matter so far, however, The Earl of Christian said that this an estion of submarine talegraphs ought not to be considered simply and solely on the ground as to whether the line would pay commartially. It must be remembered that these stations were valuable to this country, not only as great commercial emperis, but they were preat military and neval outposts. He did not understand one remark of the noble earl; he had spoken as if there were no submarine telegraph between be a mistake in the matter, as he himself had seen it at work. He wished to call attention to an important point in connexion with this must be, tend that was the extrame importance at this every precaution in their power against these submarine telegraphs being exposed to greater risks than necessary. It should be remembered that most of our commercial transactions at the present time were began in the first instance by telegraph, and also that nearly all theselines were worked and managed by English capital. Commercially and politically, therefore, they were English property, and deserved every consideration at the hands of the Government. these submarine lines were exposed to very great and peculiar risks, while, on the other hand, through the development of modern science they could be easily repaired. The stores necessary to repair them should be close at hand and available. He sincerely trusted that during a time of peace when the Government had full opportunity of making preparations they had taken the necessary steps to secure an available supply graphic cable in this country, but it could be matter was a delicate one, but he thought it right time, and on good authority, and was generally believed, that there was a carefully elaborated scheme for taking measures against our submarine cables in the Eastern waters. It was quite right to mention these matters now, and he trusted that the Government had not been blind but that while they had had the opportunity and

The Earl of Northbrook was understood to say that the question to which the noble earl referred was of a somewhat delieste character, and that if he thought if necessary to bring the matter to the notice of the Government it would have been more advisable to do so by means of a private communication. The Earl of Derby, who spoke in a low tone scross the table, was understood to say that he stated, in reply to Viscount Sidmonth that there was no independent line to Gibraltar and Malta. The Marquis of Salisbury said there was another point which had not been noticed. It was a question whether commercial considerations were to be predominant over all others in these matters. The noble earl had simply stated that the colonies were not making this submarine line under the warrant of P'eng Yu-lin, High Com- to Hongkong, and that it would cost £20,000 & year. That was the very finational consideration tung. The man's story being told with certain which the First Lord of the Admiralty repudiated. ## EXTRACT. THREE SONNETS.

L. GINIP TO POST. Had you been wise, you never had been poor, Or knocked unanswered at a Christian door. Why did you not in youth add store to store! Knowing how fame by wealth is made scoure How genius even with fame is never sure Of boing statued upon any shore : How rapged virtue is a thing impure ; And guinealess piety a saintly bore? Go to ! your honesty's a blank; your purse Is penniless; your feet and back are bare. Die like a man, and leave the world your ourse! Heavens! how you start, like any king! and glare With glorious oyes, as if you were a god!

·II.-POET TO CYNIC. What voice is this that counsels with a sneer, To end a life that fails to gather pance ? Surely in poverty is no offence ! Surely in mintage is no magio pony · To buy salvation in another sphere. Where only grace and worth make competents Baro feet, bare back 1 "-Not these, but this, I foar-Naked of heafenly knowledge going hence. Who lives on less than little may be rich : An empire's revenues o'erspent make poor : 'Tis not the orown; but the king's heart, is king, And rears him high or rolls him in the ditch. At counsels of the gods I sing secure, And all the stars sing with me as I sing.
